Richard Fox : The Food and Beer Cookbook before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Food and Beer Cookbook:

When we think of beer, we generally think of a pint of bitter or lager, and yet there is a diversity of styles and flavours out there to enable a consumer never to repeat the same experience twice. What's more, these beers are classic recipes in their own right - lovingly created by people with a passion for flavour and a zest for life. It is no coincidence, or falsehood then, that beer is a natural accompaniment and ingredient, to all manner of foods, particularly where the produce shares the same artisan values as the beer. The opening sections of this book introduce these beers and flavour matching principles and ideas in a quick, easy and entertaining way. This book is about pleasure, not study or pain. It is also this approach to food and beer that has inspired the recipes themselves. Seventy recipes categorised by occasion complete the sensory pleasure.

About the AuthorRichard Fox has over 20 years' experience in the beer and catering industry, as chef, bar owner and restaurateur. For the past four years, Richard has been talking, demonstrating and presenting at events from the BBC Good Food Show to Leith's School of Food and Wine. Richard has hosted gourmet food and beer events at numerous prestige venues including regular events at Harvey Nichols and a gourmet beer diner at the British Ambassadors residence in Paris. He was recently awarded Food and Beer Writer of the Year at the prestigious British Guild of Beer Writers Annual Awards Dinner 2006, for The Food Beer Cookbook.
